I Will Not Be With You Long.

Mother, place me by the window, Let me see the morning sun, For I'm dying, mother, dying, For my life is half way done.

Place me where the birds are singing, Let me hear again their song, Mother, I shall soon be younger! I will not be with you long.

Angels now are round me singing, Mother, hear you not their song? I shall soon be younger! I will not be with you long.

Mother, press me to your bosom, Shield me from the world's alarms; You have been a constant lover, For I am so weak and weary.

I who once was gay and strong; Dearest mother, draw me near me, For I will not be with you long.

Oh! how well I now remember— Dry thy tears, oh, do not weep! When you used to teach your daughter, "Now lay me down to sleep."

Come and kiss me, dearest mother, Pardon every childish wrong, For I will not be with you long.

Is Business Reviving?

This is a question frequently asked, and these asking all manifest great anxiety upon the subject of inquiry. The New York Times of Saturday says:

"As a matter of opinion, the prospect is nearly all brightened, but the corresponding period for several years, it would be rash to conclude that the improvement already realized is certainly to be lasting and to increase, or that the more cheerful views entertained by merchants are fully justified. But it is quite evident that the indications point in that direction, and these are confirmed by the experience of the last three years. We have seen a fair example of the party, indeed, it is to-day the only reliance of the Democratic leaders in the state or nation, the only hope of Tilden to carry New York and secure victory in the presidential campaign."

What of this party in New York city? Its prodigious strength, its increase of the debt of the city from $10,000,000 to $150,000,000 in ten years, its misadministration which today impedes not only the prosperity and progress, but the trade and business supremacy of the metropolis, are notorious to all who have eyes to see and intellects to reason. Not only this, but the Democratic party, as it has manifested its sympathies and bestowed its patronage where its power is undisputed and its supremacy assured, exposes its animus so distinctly and boldly that there is no mistaking its motives and inspirations. On this point we present some evidence that requires no argument to give it logical force and legitimate effect.

Barton N. Harrison was the private secretary and trusted confidant of Jefferson Davis, while the latter, executive head of the rebellion, was president of the so-called "Confederacy." Barton N. Harrison is now, as he has been since the beginning of his administration, the private secretary of the Democratic mayor of New York, Mr. Wicks.

Gen. Smith, who has been educated by the government at West Point, was street commissioner of New York in 1861. Upon the outbreak of the rebellion Gen. Smith abandoned his lucrative municipal office, joined the rebel army, was promoted to a major generalship, and fought for the "Confederacy" and against the Union to the close of the war. Gen. Smith now holds the lucrative office of city surveyor, and the Democratic municipal government of New York city.

Gen. Lovell, who was Smith's deputy commissioner in 1861, and who ran away with his chief and fought with him under the flag of treason throughout the war, is now installed by the municipal government of the metropolis as deputy city surveyor, under his old chief, Gen. Smith.

These men abandoned their offices to join the rebel army immediately after Fort Sumpter was fired upon, and we are informed upon good democratic authority that they drew their salaries from the treasury of New York city for months after they had taken up arms against the Union.

Mr. McLaughlin is the deputy of the county clerk of New York, Mr. Walsh, an office of responsibility and profit. Mr. McLaughlin's highest claim to this democratic patronage, so far as we are advised, is the fact that he was a colonel in the rebel army, and fought to the "last ditch" for the confederate cause.

This is but a brief chapter. But it is utterly unnecessary to conclusions that cannot be ignored. They elucidate more clearly than a volume of mere argument could show, the prevailing spirit, the controlling sympathies and the all-pervading animus that have possession of the democratic party and give direction to its leadership. We do not believe that the people of this country are prepared to surrender to it, any more than they were willing to surrender the Union to the possession of treason when armed rebellion sought to destroy the Republic.—Troy Daily Times.

Origin of "He Has an Axe to Grind"

Franklin says, "When I was a little boy, I remember, one cold winter's morning, I was accosted by a smiling man, with an axe on his shoulder."

"My pretty boy," said he, "has your father a griststone?"

"Yes sir," said I.

"You are a fine little fellow," said he, "Will you let me grind an axe on it?"

"Pleased with the compliment of 'a fine little fellow,' I 'O yes sir' answered; 'it is down in the shop.'"

"And will you, my man," said he patting me on the head, "get me a little hot water?"

How could I refuse? I ran and soon brought a kettle full.

"How old are you, and what's your name?" continued he without waiting for a reply. "I'm sure you're one of the finest I ever have seen. Will you just turn a few minutes for me?"

Tinkled with the fatty, like a fool I went to work, and bittler I did I rue the day. It was a new axe, and I toiled and tugged till I was almost tired to death. The school bell rang, and I could not get away. My hands were blistered, and I was not half ground. At length, however, the axe was sharpened, and the man turned to me with—

"Now, you little rascal you've played the truant; send to school, or you'll get it!"

Also! thought I, it was hard enough to turn a griststone this cold day, but now to be called a little rascal, was too much; I sunk deep into my mind, and often have I thought of it since.

When I see a merchant over-polite to his customers, begging them to take a little brandy, and throwing the goods on the counter, thinks I, that man has an axe to grind for me!

When I see a man flatter the people, making great professions of attachment to liberty, who is in private life a selfish, cunning, and grasping man, I think, that fellow would set you turning grindstones.

When I see a man boistered into office by party spirit, without a single qualification to render him either respectable or useful, I think, that man has an axe to grind for a fool.

Let no man fix his abode where five advantages are not to be found—wealth, a divine teacher, a magistrate, a river and a physician.

A woman in Pittsburg, Pa., has shot at her husband three different times by mistake, and he not only comes home as late at night as ever, but he has bought her a better pistol. There must be something good in such a man.

The College Rivalry.

At the present time there are seven students in the University of Vermont who were refused admission to Middlebury college to correspond to those which they entered. A year ago a young man was denied admission to Middlebury after two trial examinations. Deeply affected by his failure he was advised to spend another year in a good high school. Instead of that, he went to the University and was admitted into the classical course. At the opening of the present college year, five young men were rejected at Middlebury; they applied at the University and were accepted. Last year a young man was admitted at Middlebury on conditions; he continued through the year with these unimpaired, and at the close was refused advancement to the Sophomore class. He returned at the beginning of the present college year and again secured a Freshman class; receiving word from the authorities at the University (as his friends asserted) that if he would withdraw from Middlebury college and enter the University he should be admitted into the Sophomore class; he was honorably dismissed from Middlebury, with a Freshman's standing, at his own request, was advanced in the University to the Sophomore year, and is now in good and regular standing in the Sophomore class in the classical course. These facts suggest the question, have we a "Botany Bay" in a New England college? Is the standard of scholarship becoming lowered for the sake of numerical ascendancy, and is there not more force than there ought to be in the "slap bowl" epithet which it is reported has been applied to the University as it formerly was to Union college at Schenectady?—St. Albans Messenger.
